

Andrea Zinato, graduated from the Ca' Foscari University of Venice and PhD in Iberian Studies (Alma Mater Studiorum-University of Bologna), is currently full professor of Spanish literature (L-Lin/05) at the Department of Languages and Foreign Literatures from the University of Verona, after having worked at the Universities of Pisa and Bologna. He dedicates himself to medieval Spanish literature: the main lines of research concern the poesía de cancionero, the prose of the fifteenth century (with particular attention to translations, vulgarisations and travel literature), the classical tradition in medieval literature and culture, ecdotics and textual criticism, the relations between Spain and Venice. He also deals with Sephardic literature and culture. He participates in numerous national and international research projects. He is a member of the PhD program in foreign languages and literatures and of scientific committees of sector journals. He is also vice-president of the Asociación Hispánica de Literatura Medieval and is academic responsible for the Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures of the Catalan language and culture courses.
