About me

I am 25 years old and I am a PhD student at the Department of Human Sciences, Sociology curriculum, in Verona. My ongoing research project aims to analyze the caregiver population category, hypothesizing - in a structural interactionist perspective - an inverse correlation between perceived discomfort and the use of formal forms of support. By investigating the impact that formal support has on the well-being of the informal caregiver, it will be possible to indicate the factors that limit its adoption. This analysis will allow us to define effective intervention models and facilitate the planning of more accessible and targeted services, capable of alleviating the care burden and improving the quality of life of both caregivers and those assisted.

Skills

Methodological

Social Network Analysis: Skills in social network analysis; advanced use of software such as UCINET6 and Social Network Visualizer.

Quantitative Analysis: Skills in descriptive and inferential data analysis, using open source software such as PSPP and Jamovi for dataset management, execution of statistical tests (t-test, ANOVA, regression, etc.) and production of graphical and tabular outputs.

Soft Skills

Ability to rigorously organize complex data, to document the analysis phases in a replicable way, and to communicate the results in a clear and structured form, even in academic and scientific contexts.
